In 490 BC, Darius was a powerful king of Persia. Persia is in Asia. Nowadays, it is two countries, Iran and Iraq. Darius sent a big army on 600 ships to attack the city of Athens in Greece. The Athenian people sent their best runner, Pheidippides to another city, Sparta, to ask for help. The Spartans were celebrating a festival. They could not come and help. Pheidippides ran back to Athens. In four or five days he ran 160 kilometres. Then he joined the army fighting against the Persians. The two armies met at a place called Marathon. The Persians attacked the Athenians in the middle, but the strongest Athenians soldiers were on the left and right. They came round and attacked the Persians. Six thousand four hundred Persians died, but only one hundred and ninety two Athenians, and the Persians ran back to their ships. Pheidippides ran to Athens.
